FIDE Match Uncertain

Kasparov-Kasimdzhanov?

Promoted as the "FIDE Reunification Match", the contest which would pit Gary Kasparov against the current FIDE knockout champion, Rustam Kasimdzhanov, is now in doubt. It was scheduled to start in Dubai in early January. But the recent FIDE Congress promoted no concrete plans nor guarantee of prize money. The original "Prague Agreement" was to have Kasparov play against then FIDE champion Ponomarev but the latter balked at the arrangements. The winner was to have played the winner of the recent Kramnik-Leko match. But that is not even in the plans now as Kramnik, who won against Leko, claims that FIDE did not fulfill their part of the agreement. So what now of the Kasparov-Kasimdzhanov match?

Well the Turkish Chess Federation has stepped in with a proposal to host and guarantee the match should the Dubai arrangements fall through. Strangely FIDE has been silent on the matter. In a letter to FIDE President Kirsan Ilyumzhanov, Kasparov has related that it would be impossible to prepare for any match unless the $1M prize money was in an escrow account. Kasparov has given FIDE until Nov. 10 to arrange the Turkey money. His deadline for the Dubai guarantee of Oct. 30 has already past. It looks doubtful that any January match let alone the FIDE winner vs. Kramnik for ultimate reunification will take place any time soon.
