Garry Fed Up Over Delays

The on again off again FIDE match between Kasparov and Kasimdzhanov is apparently off for good. Garry has told FIDE that he is no longer waiting for empty promised to be filled. The match was to be held originally this month but no guarantees have been made. After 2-1/2 years of waiting (first for a match with Ponomarev) Garry has decided he needs to pursue other things. His quest to regain the FIDE title through the Prague agreement is thus ended.

Citing lost opportunities such as the on-going Super-GM Corus tournament, Garry claims to be held hostage to the whims of FIDE. His consolation is the knowledge that for 20 years he has maintained the top spot on the World Chess Ratings Lists.

In a letter dated January 18th to FIDE, Garry claimed that his "only retreat is from championship chess politics." It is no secret that Garry's future plans may include a foray into Russian politics. So maybe this is his "political clock" alarm going off. In any event it sounds like a good bet that Garry will be entering the next big Super-GM tournament.
